Inner Range NDAA

Statement Regarding

Section 889 of the National Defence Authorization Act (NDAA)

Inner Range with this Statement informs anyone to whom it may concern of our compliance with Section 889 of the US National Defence Authorization Act, also known as NDAA.

NDAA (the National Défense Authorization Act) is a set of federal laws passed every year by the US government. One of the restrictions in these laws is that manufacturers of security devices, including CCTV cameras, are not permitted to use components made by certain manufacturers in their products.

We do not use any equipment, system, or service that incorporates telecommunications equipment or services by manufacturers identified in NDAA Section 889 as a critical, substantial, or essential component of any system, or as part of any system of the Inner Range hardware and/or software products.

None of the Inner Range products contain parts from the manufacturers or any of their affiliates defined under NDAA Section 889.

Inner Range may update this Statement periodically as needed. The date of the most recent update is indicated below.

Last Update: May 6th, 2024.
